“ Mr. Hopper was my first supervisor at the Department of Education. He was a smart and kind man. He loved to share his knowledge of science. I distinctly still remember after all these years that he once told me he thought it was superstitious to believe that you shouldn't stand at a window when it is lightning outside. Then one day he was standing in his house watching lightning strikes outside when he was struck and thrown down to the floor and later woke up with a much different view of and respect of it. Rest in paradise, Mr. Hopper.
